Contents

1. Preface 9

2. Introduction 10

3. Was a harguz* a heap of stones, a slab, a crag or a mountain? 17
- 3.1 The case of Harreby, Jutland 17
- 3.2 Research history and harguz* in the Medieval texts and dialects 21
  - 3.2.1 harguz* in dictionaries and other 19th- and early 20th-century close readings 21
  - 3.2.2 Discussion of harguz* in dictionaries and other 19th-century close readings 24
  - 3.2.3 The standard etymology, circular reasoning and the alternative etymology 60

4. What traits characterize the landscapes around places with ancient harguz* names? 66
- 4.1 Ancient harguz* place names near a passage leading through a barrier 66
  - 4.1.1 Type 1, a strait or valley detours a hill or mountain that shoots in from the side 71
  - 4.1.2 Type 2, a passageway cuts through a major landscape barrier 81
  - 4.1.3 Type 3, still or running water cuts through a barrier, often a moraine, into an inlet or a minor part of a lake 103
- 4.2 Cases of uncertain age that fit into the § 4.1 pattern 124
- 4.3 Are the 'heap of stones / stony ground' or 'mountain / crag explanations more plausible? 133
- 4.4 Is the pattern that I point out plausible as a name-giving concept? 138
- 4.5 Harguz* place names that do not fit into the 'passage through barriers' pattern. What is the earliest meaning and how have the meanings evolved? 144
- 4.6 Harguz* names that could have a connection with passages through landscape barriers 151

5. Old harguz* names that seem not to reflect a passage through a landscape barrier. 161

6. Harguz* landscape barrier passages amplified by cultic constructions 169

7. What is the relationship between harguz* as passages and as cultic buildings and groves? 172

8. A comparison of the landscape around places with harguz* names and other sacral names. 175

9. Conclusion 193

10. References 198